The object of our establishment is to fix in the public mind such quotations as these, which we are prepared to answer at our store:

Where can I get this or that?
Where can I match this?
Where can I get the latest?
Where can I get the best of everything?
Where are the prices the lowest?

WOUNDED IN SHAM BATTLE

W. W. Hardy, of Glenwood, Was Wounded in Eyesight.

GUNNER'S FLAGRANT MISTAKE

An Intoxicated Artilleryman at the Montrose Encampment Placed a Cartridge in a Live Cannon—The Premature Discharge Seriously Wounded Hardy and Might Have Blown Him Into Eternity—The Day Devoted to Susquehanna County Veterans.

Special to the Scranton Tribune.

MONTROSE, Pa., Sept. 5. DURING the sham battle at the second day's reunion and encampment of the Susquehanna county veterans at this place, William W. Hardy, of Glenwood, a brother of Colonel D. W. Hardy, of the same place, was seriously injured by a premature discharge of a cannon. His face, neck and arms were severely burned and he will lose the sight of at least one eye. The accident happened late in the afternoon, but created such excitement as to terminate the day's programme, excepting the tin wedding of the "Four Brothers" post, of Montrose, in the evening.

Fort Defiance occupied by old soldiers and covered by a skirmish line of Sons of Veterans, was located at the top of a ledge of rocks within the ground of the Susquehanna county agricultural society where the encampment is being held. Company G, of the Thirteenth regiment was storming the position from the grove beneath. When a portion of the national guardsmen performed a flank movement and came charging up a narrow path, each Lord, of the position, one of the gunners, shoved a cartridge into the muzzle of the piece before it had been swabbed with water. William Dennis, of Montrose, an experienced artilleryman, had his thumb upon the vent but was thrust aside in the confusion of the charge and a discharge was caused by the sparks inside at the moment Hardy was ramming the load. All that saved his upper body from complete severance was his proximity to the cannon and a sideways position. The load glanced across his chest and face, hurling him several feet and sent the ramrod flying into splinters rods away.

WILL LOSE AN EYE.

After being treated in the adjutant general's quarters by Drs. Brandage and Gardner, of Factoryville and Montrose, Hardy was removed to the home of Quartermaster Sergeant Charles Watrous. Both physicians told him that the injury was not serious, and that the sight of his right eye and that the sight of the other may be ruined.

Enoch Lord, who so carelessly placed the cartridge within the gun before the piece was swabbed with water at the time, but, according to bystanders, was so drunk that he could not make an attempt to keep Hardy from the muzzle of the piece. The accident was witnessed by about 2,500 persons and created intense excitement. The executive staff is released from blame from the fact that they selected only Hardy, Dennis and Michael Moore, all experienced artillerymen, to handle the cannon. Hardy was in command of the gunners and must have known of Lord's inebriated condition. This is the third accident of the kind in this borough. In 1857 a man named Titus was killed and his brother had an arm blown off during an encampment a private belonging to Captain Ben Stark's Wilkes-Barre company of national guardsmen received a blank charge in the face at less than five paces.

A FLAG PRESENTATION.

Today was particularly devoted to the doings of Susquehanna county veterans, although many members of the One Hundred and Forty-third, whose reunion was held yesterday, were present. The morning was occupied with greetings and sociability. The gathering of the afternoon was addressed by Colonel C. K. Campbell, of Pittston, the speaker of the day, and Captain N. J. Hawley, of Company F, One Hundred and Forty-first regiment. The citizens of Montrose, through Justice J. B. McCollum, of the Pennsylvania supreme court, presented Four Brothers post with a handsome silk flag. Acknowledgment of the gift was made by Captain H. E. Beardsley, commander of the post and general commanding of the veterans' organization. An exhibition drill by Company G, Thirteenth regiment, National Guard of Pennsylvania, brought the programme to the sham battle mentioned above.

At 7:30 o'clock this evening, the camp fire of the local post was lighted and festivities incident to the tin wedding began. Impromptu speeches, band music, songs, the banjo club and war-time rationals occupied the several hours of informal fraternizing and enjoyment.

The business meeting of the Susquehanna county veterans will be held tomorrow morning, and the meridian gun will be the signal for striking tents.

Archbald.

The ordinance granting the right of way on Laurel, church and Bridge streets to which reference was made in Monday's TRIBUNE, has not yet been signed by Burgess Burke, although a week has passed since it was approved by the borough council. The ordinance is in many respects similar to that under which the Carbondale traction company was given privileges here. Briefly, its provisions are that the Lackawanna Valley Transit company shall have the right of way over Bridge street to Church street, thence to Laurel street as far as the borough line, with the right to move and place poles and turnouts as may be necessary for its accommodation. Only "T" rails shall be laid with a gauge of not more than five feet and two inches. The location shall be prescribed by the street committee of the council. The company shall be obliged to furnish an indemnifying bond in the amount of $5,000 conditioned on the faithful performance of the provisions of the ordinance. It shall keep the road in repair during the construction of the railway. Cars shall not be run faster than the limit of the ordinance, and poles shall not be located so as to damage property or interfere with travel, and the borough shall have the privilege of using them for fire alarm boxes. Bridges that it may be necessary for the company to cross shall be strengthened so far as they are concerned by the railway. The company shall commence the construction of the track within one month and have it completed within one year from the passage of the ordinance under penalty of the forfeiture of the privilege. Whoever is guilty of wilfully violating the ordinance shall be fined $100. The company shall do so at its own expense under the direction of the street commissioner. The street shall be left in safe traveling condition and the borough shall be "reimbursed for all damages legally resulting from the carelessness, negligence or oversight of the railway company." The crossings shall be plankled at the intersection of streets as also shall the street underneath the Delaware and Hudson canal at Plane C. Wherever the track is laid in the middle of the street it shall be plankled either side of the company, and also agree to supply drainage pipe where necessary to carry off surface water. The ordinance also provides that the company shall have the part of the street occupied by its tracks whenever the borough passes the remainder. There are some provisions in the ordinance that appear superfluous and others, highly necessary, that are omitted. There is nothing said as to the exact location of the tracks on any of the streets, and there are no restrictions in the matter of fare. If the road is to be built and operated these matters are too important to be overlooked. The borough council might easily have profited by its experience with the Carbondale traction company. Even if there should be necessity for such an ordinance as that presented to the council last Thursday night it would have been wiser to take this part into consideration at a while before giving it their approval.

TARIFF RETURNS.

Custom Receipts from the Gorman Measure as Compared with McKinley Bill.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 5.—Sufficient returns have reached the treasury department as to custom receipts under the new tariff law to institute a comparison with custom figures under the McKinley law. Under that law, which was supposed to increase tariff rates, the withdrawal of goods from the custom houses was made prior to the law taking effect, Oct. 3, 1890, to escape increased duties. Under the new tariff law the withdrawal of goods took place and is still taking place after the act became a law, Aug. 28. Custom receipts as recorded at the treasury are always two days late, and, in fact, from the Pacific coast are usually ten days late, so that the true statement of government receipts for any one day could only be accurately given by aggregating custom receipts by days from all ports which is not done by the treasury method of bookkeeping.

The figures here given, however, are approximately correct. In the comparison here made, only four days are taken in each instance in the McKinley period, including two days after the act became a law, and in the new tariff law excluding the custom receipts for the two days immediately following the date when the law took effect.

Receipts under new tariff law, $381,740, $1,019,000, $1,183,149, $1,121,758. Receipts under McKinley law, $1,454,115, $2,692,578, $1,506,747, $1,061,951.
